I have a REST web service that I use to get information from a third party system. What is happening is the following. The API requests a token for authentication. curl -v -i -u -X POST \-H "Accept: application/json" \-H "Content-Type: application/json" \-H "Key: API_KEY" \-H "Cache-Control: no-cache" \-data '{"user_id": "1", "application_id": "3", "token": "1234..."}' \ The weird thing is that for whatever reason, curl is having issues with the following line (it was working fine before the character was added): -H "Cache-Control: no-cache" If I take out the cache-control line everything works fine. However if I leave the cache-control line in the curl statement it fails. My question is why is the forward slashes being interpreted? Would there be any other reason why this would be happening? This is really, really weird because there is no forward slashes in the body of the curl request I'm making. A: You have quotes around your command line argument. Thus -H becomes -H "Cache-Control: no-cache". Try -H "Cache-Control: no-cache" 1. Technical Field The present invention relates to a process for producing a polysaccharide-based polymer material, more particularly, to a process for producing a polymer material comprising a biopolymer selected from a group consisting of an algal protein, a polysaccharide Occ13bf012

C.A major road project requiring the demolition of an old Richmond church is scheduled to begin Monday. The old St. John's Episcopal Church is in the 600 block of East Gessner, adjacent to the reopening of the Renaissance mansion that was built in the late 1800s. The church is being demolished as part of the Cape Charles Bypass Project, which is designed to connect Route 117 to Route 10, a major north-south road that passes through Cape Charles. According to a news release, the demolition and relocation of utilities and the building of a new alignment for the bypass will cost $7.5 million. The two-lane bypass will replace a current four-lane travel lane from Route 117 to Route 10 that is frequently used by northbound traffic exiting the Old Town. The existing bridge will be replaced and the road will be widened to four lanes. The project has been in the planning stages since 2009, according to the release.chinese The Chinese-language translation is going to need to be updated as well. But we've been talking about that for a while. Like, back in March 2010, the BSD Magazine mailing list mentioned replacing grans with a drop-in replacement for localized strings. That would probably be a good way to go. Here's a thread from that time
